23 Kaster, Guardians, 55 24 The trope of the socially climbing grammarian appears in Aulus Gellius and Ausonius as well: Kaster, Guardians, 57, 131-32; Kaster argues that the grammarians in Ausonius's circle did not owe their rise to their profession per se, though

Constantine and the Captive Christians of Persia

Constantine and the Captive Christians of Persia was a long time in the making. Technically, it began as my doctoral dissertation at Duke University, but the foundation for it was laid years earlier when I knew little about Constantine and even less about the Acts of the Persian Martyrs. As a master's
